Team Building Activity 2

On March 3rd, team 3 went to Pins in downtown Columbus and played a game of duckpin bowling together. We chose this activity because it was not super familiar to everyone and we thought it would be a great social and relaxing activity to do after work. We talked about random things, such as competitive bowling, rock climbing, jobs, and much more. This helped us connect more than in the classroom as we were able to focus on non-capstone work and enjoy each other's company. Compared to the last team bonding experience, we were much more comfortable around each other and it was evident that we all had bonded over the course of the year working together as a team.

Regular, non-capstone meetings like this are essential to promoting positive interactions in and out of the classroom, as we learn more about each other participating in social events outside of capstone. When we can interact without schoolwork involved, we can find commonalities and differences and navigate them before entering the classroom again, and it overall improves working together through all challenges of a team project. Enjoying time with the team also facilitates a positive classroom environment as we then enjoy each other's company working together, even if the task at hand is difficult or unenjoyable.
